First-Year Information Literacy Program

Our First-Year Information Literacy Program with University 101, English 101 and English 102 is designed to give a firm foundation in the research process and the acquisition of basic research skills to first-year students. Students learn about information literacy concepts and develop research skills from their professors in class, from librarians in three dedicated library sessions, and from assignments on which classroom and library faculty collaborate. The goal is to focus on research as a process and to reinforce that process between the library and the classroom and across the three courses. The program is overseen by a First-Year Information Literacy Advisory Committee made up of members from the Library, the Student Success Center and University 101, and the English division.

If you teach one of the courses or are simply interested in more information about the program, consult our First-Year Information Literacy Program Library Guide.
